Puyo Puyo Tetris."I have alopecia in places I never heard of. I'm getting this article in the mail, from some reputable sources," said Eikmann. "It's probably around $15-20." Part of the mystery of the condition stems from the fact that the real number of sufferers is unknown. Since the condition varies from person to person, it's difficult to gather statistics. But, it's suspected to be more prevalent in men than women. More often, the hair doesn't fall out completely, but drops or comes off in clumps. For Eikmann, she has alopecia areata. She's been fighting it for eight years. Eikmann's hair grows normally, but when she goes outside, she notices the hairs on her head starting to fall off. Eikmann gets spots of alopecia on her scalp, neck, and back, but sometimes, the hair on her nose and cheeks seems to disappear. "I take clippers and get my eyebrows shaved," she said. "I make sure to get a lot of the hair and the foundation that holds it all together. It's like a lot of worry and stress." Most people know about alopecia, but the causes for the Puyo Puyo Tetris rro.Q: Reverse engineering of a packet I have a simple script that I'm trying to reverse engineer. Data is captured by Wireshark on a VLAN and then the packet is forwarded to the destination host which connects to another VLAN. There is at least one switch (SW1) and the forwarding is done via Ethernet. The information I'm trying to get is the IP addresses. I've tried to look through the fields, but it's hard to understand what is going on. (The capturing process is not under my control, it's done by an external service.)

So, here is what I've tried to capture: 1-7 bytes: source MAC address 4-8 bytes: destination MAC address 3-16 bytes: source IP address 3-16 bytes: destination IP address 2-2 bytes: Ether type 1-2 bytes: Ether type field (keep the bytes around) 68-80 bytes: IP source address 68-80 bytes: IP destination address In this example, SW1 is a Cisco 3750 with the following config: ip routing 172.16.X.X/24 interface FastEthernet1.2 ip 192.168.Y.Z/30 ip 172.16.X.X/24 ip 172.16.X.Y/30 ip 172.16.X.Y In case it's not clear yet, that is one switch, and the interface FastEthernet1.2 is the one that I need for the packet to reach the destination host. A: I just took a crack at what you were asking, and I'm still not sure what you're asking but here it is:

Source MAC -> datau01, MAC destination -> datau02 Source IP -> 172.16.0.4/32 Dest IP -> 172.16.0.12/32 Ethernet type -> 6 Hop count
-> 4 You can see that the hop count was 1-3, so a switch will always have 4 hops. I would presume there
